

Construction and Development

OVERVIEW

With more than 50 years of history in the construction and development industry, Jordan Ramis is committed to the future of the built environment and the people who build it. We offer services to the industry that address the myriad of legal issues that contractors and developers face on construction and development projects throughout the Pacific Northwest.

Contractors, developers, and design professionals turn to us to advise them on all aspects of the construction and development process, from contract negotiation, to claims, to dispute resolution. We know projects are often bound to a timeline and our familiarity with the industry's processes and procedures helps our clients stay on track and avoid delays.

Additionally, our team assists the construction and development industry in areas in which the industry faces issues, such as employment, business, real estate, and land use. In each of these areas of the law, the construction and development industry encounters unique challenges. Our team knows the industry, its needs, and has the legal expertise to help clients in all aspects of their businesses.

Our involvement in the construction and development industry goes deeper than providing legal counsel to our clients. As members of a broad range of industry groups—such as Northwest Utility Contractors Association, Home Builders Association, Associated Builders and Contractors, and Construction Financial Management Association—our team is actively involved in and supportive of the industry. Many of our attorneys are also dedicated to serving on committees and in leadership positions within organizations like these that advocate for enriching the building industry. Our attorneys frequently present at industry group meetings and contribute articles on industry-related topics in trade publications, such as the Daily Journal of Commerce Oregon. With a deep connection to the industry, we bring the familiarity and credibility needed for effective representation of construction and development clients.

Jordan Ramis leverages its legal expertise and involvement in the construction and development industry to offer its clients efficient yet innovative legal solutions. Our team offers the industry the convenience and ease of a full-service business law firm, equipped to serve all our clients' needs.